NORTH SEA FREED OF LONG FIELD OF DEEP MINES

Admiral Strauss Cables to Secretary Daniels That End of Navy's Laborious Task in North Waters Has Come.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—The clearing of the North sea mine field has been accomplished, according to a cable received on this date from the German navy, and contributed to laying it down, so the navy has done her share by way of finishing the job. Secretary of the Navy Daniels acknowledged this cable message from Rear Admiral Joseph Strauss, commander of the mine forces of the Atlantic fleet.

"Finished sweeping North sea mine field," the cable said. "The mine force of the Atlantic fleet, from the armistice until early last spring, the navy department laid its plans for gathering up the mines it had sowed. Then the mine sweeping fleet of 4,000 officers and seamen steamed into Kriewahl, whence it began the work of sweeping up 10,000 American-laid mines. It has been completed, and while accounts of the work have been meager, it has come to light that there have been several casualties, and that the tales of heroism will rival the most valiant accomplishments of the war.

Planting Is Task.

To lay this field of mines and prevent the operation of German submarines out of the North sea was a Herculean task. People in this country remember that the first German trans-Atlantic submarine Deutschland stole out of the North sea under the nose of the British through the passage between Scotland and Scandinavia. With American boys being transported across the Atlantic by the millions, President Wilson was unwilling to take this chance on the "sub" and insisted that the north passage of the sea be blocked. Immediately plans were developed by the navy and the work of laying down 20,000 mines started. The American forces laid 27,000 of these, practically put an end to German operations through this opening, as it was almost impossible for an unwarned ship to make passage, and it was upon the knowledge of this successful bottling up that Admiral Jellicoe predicted the actual control of the German submarines. After the armistice came the work of clearing the mines, rated as one of the most hazardous undertakings of the war. Rear Admiral Strauss, who had directed their laying, was chosen to clean them out. In the British navy men are given special bonuses for mine operations, and additional bonuses for every mine cleared. In our navy the men work "for the honor of America and the American navy." And when they go out to invade a mine field they go out to ride over tons on tons of destruction that explode, not by contact, but by contagion. All a vessel has to do is to get within the vicinity of the latest type of American mine, and—Blung!—up she goes. A column of alabaster rises from a vast sea base of jade, the seams of the ship are ripped open and often the craft or parts of the craft itself are hurled skyward.

Braved Many Dangers.

This is what the American mine sweeper had to brave. The ships of the fleet were fitted with an electrical device that minimized the action to a certain extent, and careful handling of the craft and cautious operations avoided any great number of casualties. Two officers and ten men are the known casualties. The few stories that have drifted back from the isolated fleet indicate these casualties have been principally among officers and volunteers who have gone out into imminent danger themselves after ordering other members of the crews out of the danger zone.

One of the most remarkable stories of the expedition was the salvaging by Capt. R. C. Bulmer, of the U. S. S. Pelican, after she had been ripped open by a mine. This vessel was worth a million dollars to the government, and five vessels were utilized in a high sea, filled with mines to cradle it in. At the time when it looked certain the Pelican was going to lose its first and only son, the twelve seamen who had volunteered to man her gathered in the stern for just one cigarette moment to sing "Hail! Hail! The Gang's All Here" and snatch a cup of coffee and a sandwich. Then, plunging back to their pumps and driving their relief back to the other ships, they rode the ship through the crisis and brought her safely in to drydock at Kriewahl. Shortly afterwards Capt. Bulmer lost his life in an explosion. The name of Lieut. Bruce, of the U. S. S. Bobolink will go down in naval history, as will that of Capt. Bulmer. When the drag wire of the Bobolink became entangled with another officer and sailor attempted to extricate mine wire. The mine exploded before the wire could be released. Lieut. Harner, of the U. S. S. Patuxent, was injured.

Congratulations Sent.

"It is with the greatest of pleasure that the secretary of the navy congratulates the officers and the men of the North sea mine detachment on having so creditably completed the stupendous task of clearing the North sea of the mines planted by our navy during the war. This most arduous and dangerous work, one of the greatest and most hazardous tasks undertaken by the navy, and which has been carried on with cheerfulness and integrity, will go down in the annals of naval history as one of the navy's greatest achievements. Every loyal citizen of the United States and every officer and man of the navy must look with pride upon these men who have once again fulfilled the glorious traditions of the service which they represent."

Of the 26 submarines and mine destroyers that composed Admiral Strauss' fleet, only five avoided accident in some form, but little serious damage resulted. The ships are all repaired or in drydock, and the American navy has accomplished another feat that her allies thought was almost impossible.

COMMISSION GATHERS DATA ABOUT ROOSEVELT

NEW YORK, Oct. 28.—William Boyce Thompson, president of the Roosevelt Memorial association, has issued an appeal to the state chairmen of the association, asking them to aid in the collection of biographical data concerning the late Col. Roosevelt.

In the course of his appeal, Mr. Thompson said: "The Memorial association considers it of vital importance that this material be collected without delay. Many of the men who knew Col. Roosevelt intimately are now well along in years, and, unless a special effort to gather reminiscences of Roosevelt is made now, the important record of their association with the Colonel is likely to be partially or wholly lost. All material secured will be carefully arranged and catalogued with a view toward its usefulness in the future as a basis for a comprehensive biography of Col. Roosevelt similar to the Nicolay and Hay biography of Lincoln."

Asked concerning the character of the data desired, Mr. Thompson replied: "We want anything and everything that will throw light on the character and career of Col. Roosevelt. From those who knew the Colonel only slightly we want everything of significance which they can remember of their meetings with him; from those who knew him well, we want as much as 50,000 words if we can get them." All material submitted should be addressed to Mr. William Boyce Thompson, care Roosevelt Memorial association, 1 Madison avenue, New York city.
